How to Scoop Ice Cream

The temp for tempering - The pros make sure their ice cream is properly tempered, or brought to the right temperature for scooping. Ice cream stores best at -5° F. and below, but scoops best between 0° and +10°. The colder temperatures make ice cream too hard for scooping, and higher temps will cause ice cream to stick to the scoop.

Start on the edge - The natural tendency is to scoop ice cream from the middle of the container first, but the smarter approach is to begin scooping at the edge of the container and work inward. This prevents warm air from attacking the scraps of ice cream remaining on the sides of the container, and harming their flavor.

Scoop by layers - Working through the container one scoop's depth at a time...rather than heading for the bottom and getting the sides later...keeps the tiny bubbles of air in ice cream from being compressed out. By maintaining more air in every scoop, the parlor owner gets more scoops from every container. It doesn't make any difference in the flavor of the product, but it really makes a difference at the cash register!

Keeping Your Ice Cream Fresh

Take it Right Home -- Make ice cream the last item you purchase in a grocery store visit, and buy groceries as the last stop on your shopping trip. This gets Cedar Crest into your freezer faster, before it thaws. Thawing and re-freezing ice cream allows the microscopically tiny ice crystals in ice cream to refreeze as big crystals, making the ice cream grainy and harder to scoop.

Scoop it Right Out -- Remove ice cream from your freezer just before serving. If you like ice cream a bit soft (as many customers do) allow it to thaw in the bowl on the counter. In this way, sundae toppings will easily stay on top of each other.

Refrigerate Religiously -- True ice cream addicts will want to know that the ideal freezer for ice cream is a chest model with an open top and no defrost cycle. This type of equipment keeps the ice cream at a constant temperature, without thawing and refreezing. Regardless of your freezer, make sure your temperature is set at -5°F., the perfect temperature for ice cream storage.
