What makes customers choose one restaurant or bar over another?

Operator's Edge
The Successful Independent Operator's Resource

Creating an Atmosphere for Your Bar or Restaurant
Sweet, hot food and drinks are a major factor in their decision, so is the price. But more often than you may realize, it's the atmosphere of your bar or restaurant that convinces customers to come in...or avoid them, carrying away.

To create the right atmosphere, start by considering what type of customers you want to attract. Do you want your new bar to be a comfortable, pub-like neighborhood hangout, or a chic destination for post-for-a-couple, a trendy place for singles, or the "must try" destination for hipsters and trendy types? Consider your target customers' age range, income, and where you serve. Last, but not least, keep in mind that your atmosphere should convey and reinforce your bar or restaurant's brand.

With those factors in mind, it's time to make some decisions:

Colors: Different colors have been shown to affect appetites. Warm colors generally increase appetite (which is why many fast-food establishments use red or orange) while cool colors suppress it. Your color scheme should tie into your brand and marketing materials.

Lighting: Table lamps, candles and fairy lights can create a warm and inviting atmosphere.
