A GUIDE TO DIPPING ICE CREAM

Proper techniques can be the difference between profit and loss

Weight control is key.

When you base your program on weight, there should be no loss through excessive dipping. And, if you dip by weight, "overrun" is not a factor. All fountain items and cones should be dipped with established scoop sizes to control the portion by weight. Choice of scoop sizes is important; based on a bulk weight of 72 oz. to the gallon, the following scoop sizes will provide reliable results.

No. 12 Scoop
(3 1/8 oz. per serving)
23 scoops per gallon

No. 16 Scoop
(2 1/2 oz. per serving)
29 scoops per gallon

No. 20 Scoop
(1 7/8 oz. per serving)
38 scoops per gallon

No. 24 Scoop
(1 1/2 oz. per serving)
44 scoops per gallon

Personnel training is essential.

Hand dipping is profitable only if correctly executed. Training should be thorough and ongoing. Have employees complete a daily check with an ice cream scale to check portion weights. (In some states it's illegal to sell ice cream by weight, but scales can be used for training.) Employees should also be aware of the cost of over scooping. 15 cones scooped at 1 oz. over weight is like giving away a pint of your ice cream. This can be the difference between profit and loss.

Flavor, flavor, flavor!

Flavor makes a difference! Vanilla, by weight, is the lightest of all. Fruit, nut, and chocolate are heavier. It's more practical to compensate for the differences by averaging the various weights and then selecting the one scoop size most desirable for all.

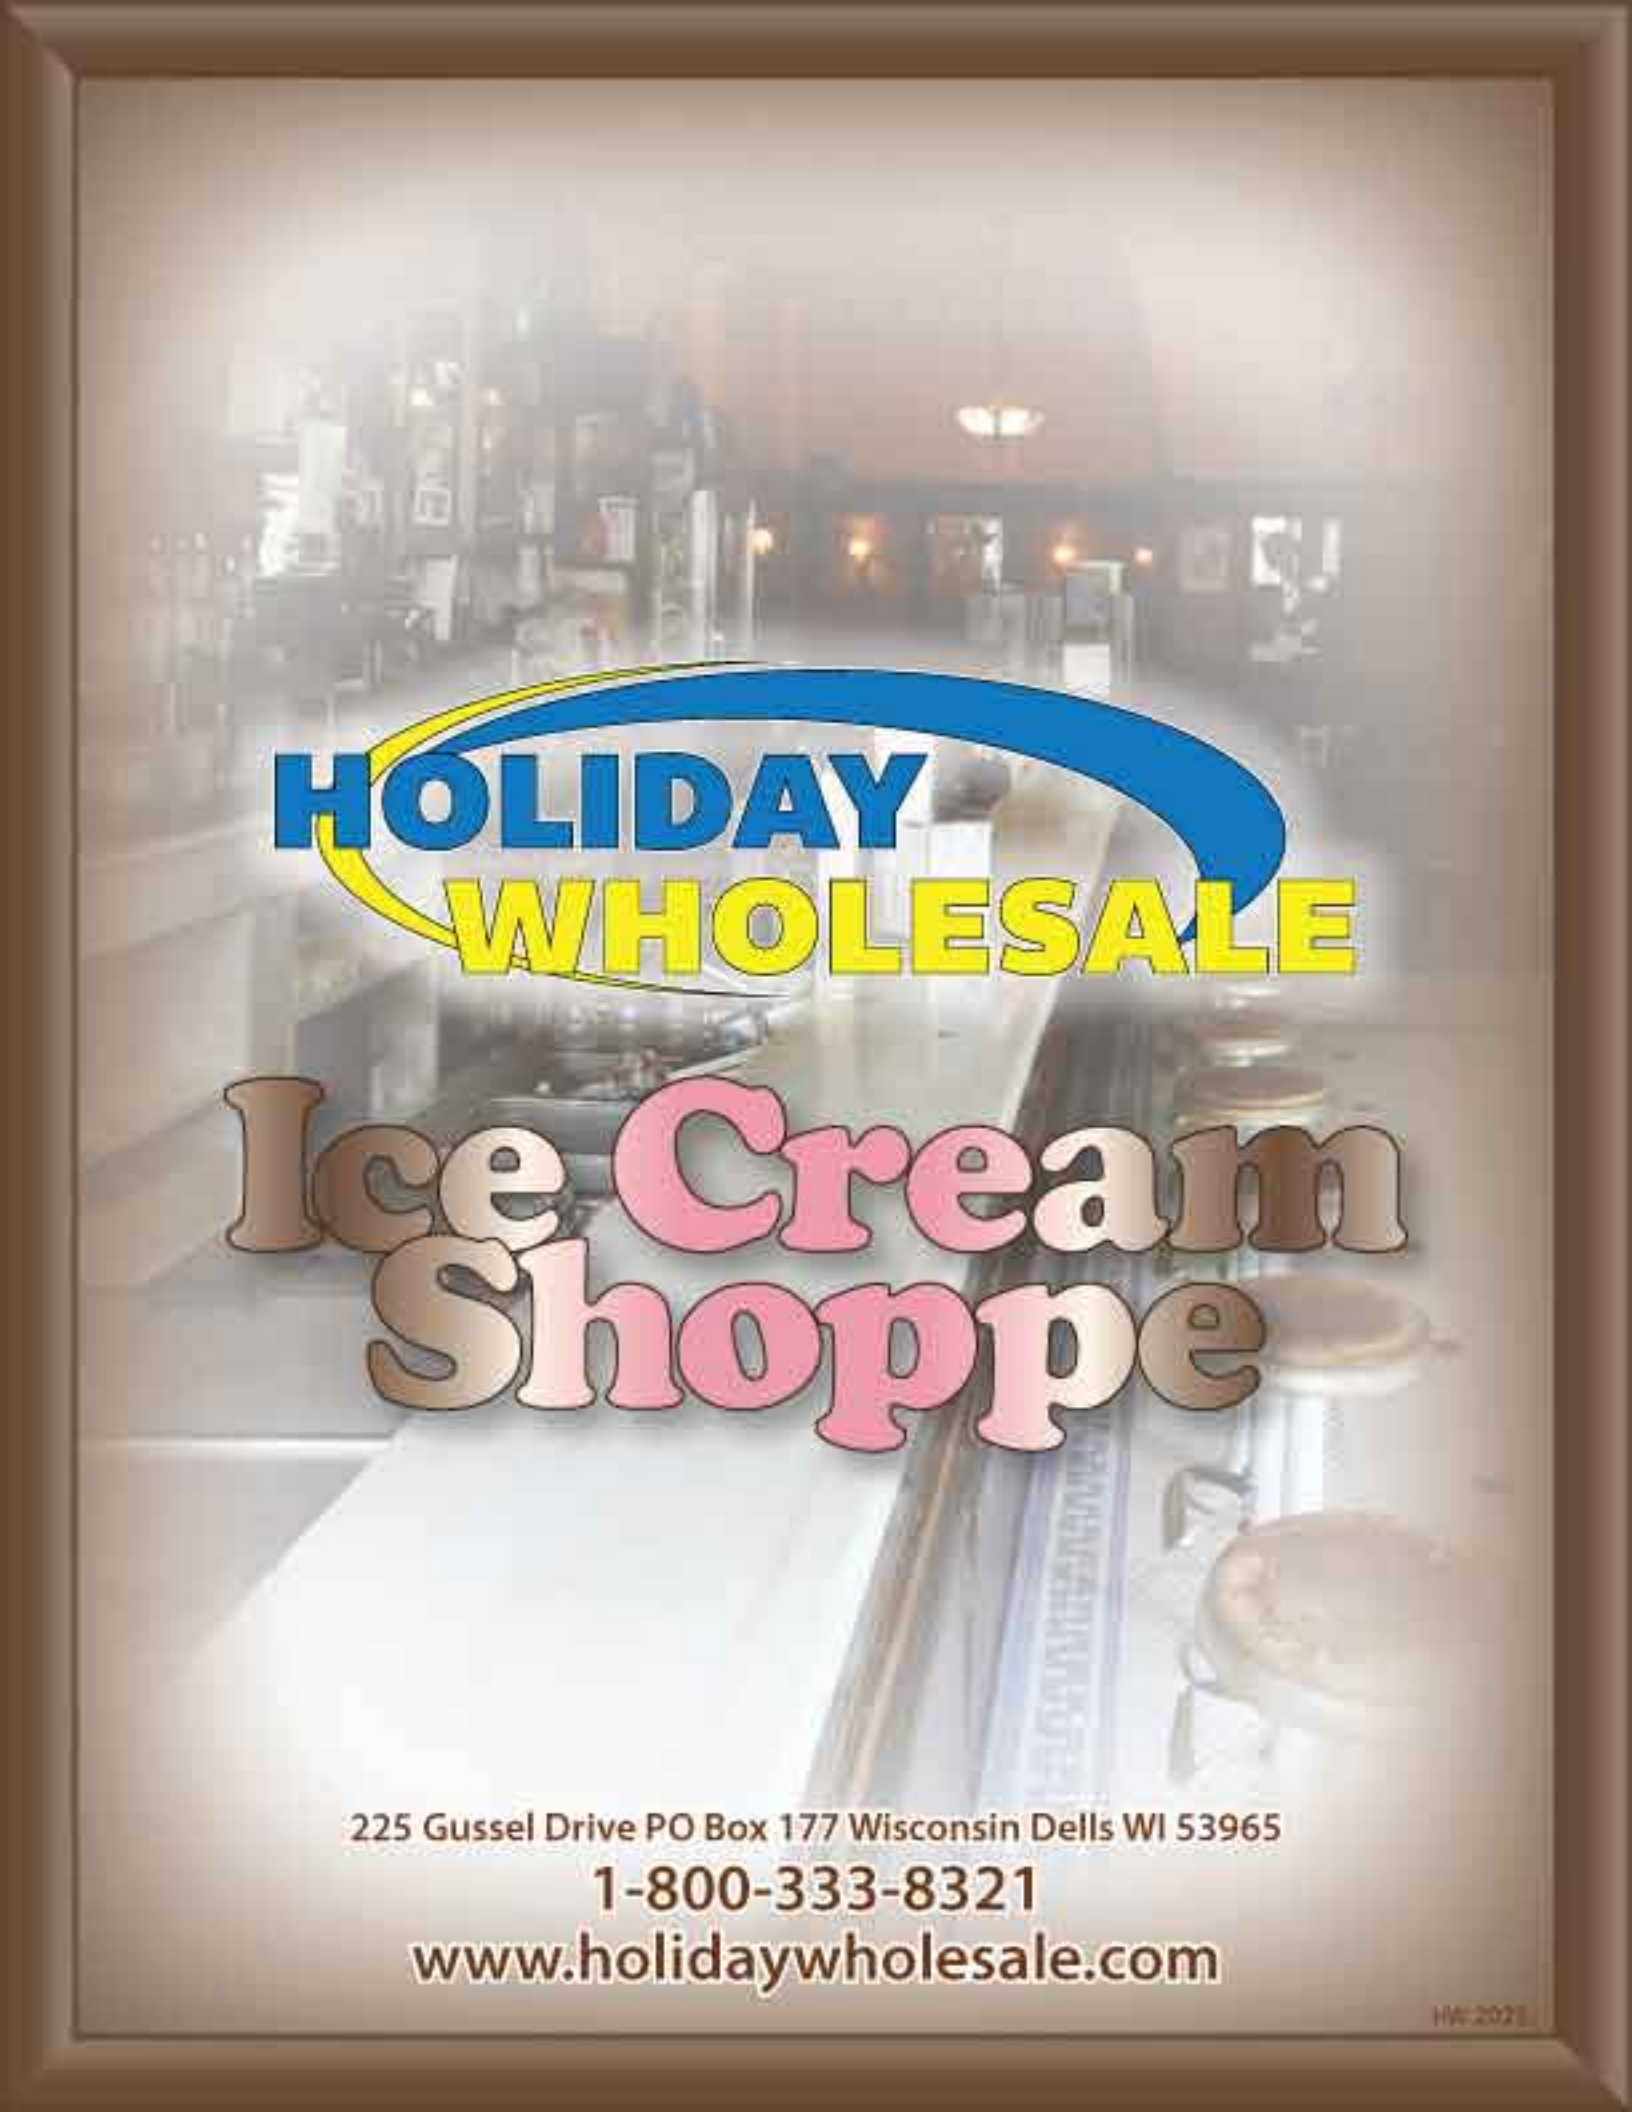

Proper scooping procedure:

- 1. Use a sharp-edged scoop. A dull scoop may squeeze the ice cream, which makes it difficult to control. A sharp-edged scoop cuts a nice ribbon of ice cream off the surface, rolling it into an attractive round ball.
- 2. Let the scoop do the work. Start scooping at the outside edge of the can, rolling around and then upward. This will produce a neat, lightly compressed ball that's consistent in weight, portion after portion. Never press the scoop against the side of the can. This will result in a small, heavy ball of ice cream and lend itself to over scooping.
- 3. Don't over handle. Every time you touch or handle ice cream, some air is lost. This air must be present in ice cream (just as in bread or cake) so that it is light and fluffy. The air you lose may cause you to dip extra in order to get to the ideal of size and shape.
- 4. Scoop in a circular motion. The next scoop should start where the last left off. Continue in the same circular pattern, moving toward the center of the can, with the circles getting smaller toward the center. This causes the ice cream can level to go down evenly. Keeping the ice cream level reduces the need to over handle and scrape down the sides of the can with a spade.
- 5. Level off the can. Even with proper scooping techniques, some leveling off is necessary. Use the back of a spade to scrape down lightly. Scraped ice cream will not dip as well, nor will it taste as smooth. Don't transfer from one can to another if there is more than one inch in the bottom; transferred ice cream is difficult to dip in portioned control.
